Maily glacier from Karmadon valley

Day 3. Starting at this day all common luggage (tent, food, ropes) will carry by ourselves. We climb up to the start of the Maily glacier (2450 m) through moraine ridge. We must be careful because glacier is open. Sometimes we need to use crampons. There are some steep places after 2770m altitude and maybe we will use fixed rope (approximately 100 meters of way). There is not so steep slope after (average slope of 32 degrees) but we must be concentrating at climbing too. Beautifully-facing Camp1 place at 3400 m, rewarded our hard all-day's work. There is a greatest view to crevasses of Maily glacier and all circuses of mountains with highest point Djimara Peak (4780m) from Camp 1. In evening time we may see lights of Tmenikau village and Vladikavkaz city. Tent camp.

Ascent: 1100m

Walking: 6h

Camp1, 3400 m

View of Maily glacier and North face Mt.Kazbek

Day 4. Today we have 3-4 hours of climbing way by quite steep (sometimes 60 degrees) stone-covered slope. Some parts of trail are covered by snow (depends at season). There is only 3km of way but we must be concentrated all the time. After some rest time we have 30min. walking to Polyakov peak 4270m. There is great view to Chach glacier (Georgia side) and shapely twin-peaks of Kazbek, which we will hopefully be rewarded with a glowing sunset. Camp2 place 4150m situated on the big stone moraine near the Maily glacier from where we will take fresh water.

Ascent: 860m

Walking: 3,5h

Morning view to Djimara 4780m and Shau-hoh peaks 4638m from Camp2 4150m

At the top of Maily pass 4400m

Day 5. Summit day! After breakfast inside the tent we take on our harness and crampons. After two hours by Maily plateau we are reached to rocky head of Maily pass 4400m (30 degrees of slope maximum). Perfect view to all Kazbek plateau and our goal for today. Small descent from pass and cross the Kazbek plateau straight to the Kazbeksky pass 4480m. This point brings together Russian and Georgian ascent route, actual summit climb takes place on the exact same route. We still cross a glacier, and after almost 3 hours to reach the "gateway" to the summit. The Mt. Kazbek consists of the small 4890m and the large Kazbek with 5033m. We traverse the back of the small Kazbek along the 30 to 35 degrees sloping ice field (in the snow takes longer) to the saddle direction 4800 m. The last part of slope (10 m high ice / snowdrift) quite steep, where we should go very cautiously. A rest before the final challenge of the very steep and sometimes bare summit ice cap. In the steep ice slope with crampons and partly through rocky passages, we are climbing our final part of way up. Sometimes we need to mobilized all our forces for crossing this ice part(maybe we put a fixed rope) and then it's TOP - the most eastern five thousand meters peak of the Caucasus rewarded us with a wonderful panoramic view of of Central and Eastern Caucasus! At the clean weather we can see another volcano, a giant of the Caucasus - Elbrus (5642 m).

After 2.5-3h of descent, we reach our camp exhausted but happy again!

Ascent/Descent: 800m

Walking: 8-10h

Last pitch before the summit
